

Dear Town Clerk of Mayodan, Town Manager, town attorney Philip E. Berger and all 5 councilmen,

I have a urgent news story I like to send to the entire town council regarding that yesterday the Tennessee State Legislature's decision to condemn the U.N.'s Agenda 21 plan through a House Resolution. So not only is it possible for the state of North Carolina to also pass a resolution to stop Agenda 21 but to stop the Globalists that run the UN.

Agenda 21 will harm this town indefinitely and here is the proof.

“State Rep. Rick Womick, R-Rockvale, pointed to policies such as a Cocke County proposal to ban building on ridgetops and a Rutherford County demand that a business owner pave his parking lot as examples of Agenda 21 put to action.”

“Casada, meanwhile, said the plan’s focus on sustainability could be used to justify forced abortions in the interest of controlling population growth. “

“It really is a problem that many Tennesseans do know about,” the measure’s sponsor, Rep. Kevin Brooks, R-Cleveland, told reporters later. “The responses we’ve received — emails, letters, phone calls, petitions signed by hundreds of Tennesseans saying, ‘Please protect us.’ That’s what we were elected to do.”

So it is clear that other states do oppose Agenda 21 and the horror stories surrounding county commissions that supported Agenda 21 and ICLEI hurting their constituents to help the globalist money masters that run the United Nations.

So I am adding this to the research the town can conduct on Agenda 21 and the threats it now poses. I've called into a nationwide political talk station broadcasting on the Rockingham County radio but they don't seem to think Agenda 21 will happen but the truth is Agenda 21 is hurting hard working Americans across the country as I speak. I can cite hundreds of other news stories and send article after article but I am trying to restrain myself from sending too many pages worth of documentation, evidence, and articles. I am only sending to the town of Mayodan the information that matters and the decision by the Tennessee state house is definitely a huge step in stopping Agenda 21. I also am going to the county board in a few months to battle against Agenda 21 through intellectual debate and the facts in the event that ICLEI comes to my county to start with ordinances to destroy the local county economy. If ICLEI doesn't come to my county then I will just speak at the public comment period there to wake up the board of commissioners to block ICLEI's demands.

Sincerely,
Brian D. Hill

Tennessee lawmakers passed a resolution Thursday condemning a United Nations environmental plan as a “destructive and insidious” effort to advance a communist agenda through the guise of community planning.

The state House of Representatives voted 72-23 in favor of House Joint Resolution 587, which denounces the nonbinding Agenda 21 plan adopted by a United Nations environmental conference two decades ago.

The plan called on members of the United Nations to adopt sustainable development principles to alleviate poverty and combat global warming. But the resolution approved by Tennessee lawmakers on Thursday depicts it as a plan for the “socialist/communist redistribution of wealth” through energy conservation policies, zoning restrictions and forced abortions.

“It reads well. It has nice words like sustainability and helping the poor,” said state Rep. Glen Casada, R-Franklin. “But what these people want to do is they want to cap the number of people this planet can have. ... So ladies and gentlemen, if that doesn’t bother you, if those words don’t scare you, we’ve got to talk.”

Little known even in environmental and planning circles until recently, Agenda 21 has grabbed the attention of conservative groups, who say the document calls on national and local governments to pursue environmental goals by limiting property rights and freedom.

Environmental groups, in turn, believe the resolution is part of a broad-based effort to roll back or prevent planning and zoning.

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro. The proposal was meant to address problems such as overpopulation, global warming and Third World poverty, but it had largely been forgotten until groups such as the Republican National Committee and the John Birch Society began to link it to zoning decisions and other local government actions that they say limit property rights.

State Rep. Rick Womick, R-Rockvale, pointed to policies such as a Cocke County proposal to ban building on ridgetops and a Rutherford County demand that a business owner pave his parking lot as examples of Agenda 21 put to action.

Casada, meanwhile, said the plan's focus on sustainability could be used to justify forced abortions in the interest of controlling population growth.

Opponents mocked the resolution.

"Boy that's ... whoo! Insidious! Communist! Socialist!" House Democratic Caucus Chairman Mike Turner said. "I didn't know what Agenda 21 was, to be honest with you. ... I really want to learn about this Agenda 21."

33 co-sponsors

Seven Democrats joined the House's 64 Republicans and one independent in voting for the measure, and the resolution's 33 co-sponsors gathered in the well of the House of Representatives when it was introduced.

Supporters said the resolution would send a message that Tennesseans oppose the actions and principles behind Agenda 21.

"It really is a problem that many Tennesseans do know about," the measure's sponsor, Rep. Kevin Brooks, R-Cleveland, told reporters later. "The responses we've received — emails, letters, phone calls, petitions signed by hundreds of Tennesseans saying, 'Please protect us.' That's what we were elected to do."

Neither the House resolution nor the U.N. plan it opposes are binding, and supporters have not shown a direct link from the plan drafted in Brazil in the early 1990s to decisions made by local governments in Tennessee 20 years later.

But they said government entities such as the courts, the Environmental Protection Agency and zoning boards could be carrying out the plan.

"It basically says in the 288-page document that they can take your land," he said. "They don't name names. They don't name a czar over this. But if in fact it's there, we don't want it to come into our borders.”

Two other states, Georgia and New Hampshire, have considered anti-Agenda 21 measures this year. Brooks said the resolution had been promoted by the RNC.

But the measure matches up nearly word for word with a model posted on the website of the John Birch Society, a conservative group that Republicans have largely shunned since the 1960s, Turner said.

“It’d almost be funny if it wasn’t so sad that so many people buy into this,” he said. “Elected officials actually think there’s a communist behind every tree. ... At one time, I used to think they tried to put this on just to keep people stirred up, but I think some of their people actually believe that.”

Brooks said the John Birch Society played no role in drafting the resolution.

Still, Jim Sandman, state coordinator for the organization, attended Thursday’s vote and praised the resolution.

“It just gives a sense to Congress where Tennesseans feel on this threat from sustainable development policies,” he said. “Private property and freedom are inseparable, and when there’s a threat against private property. ... It’s already happening, some of it.”
